Grey Colin was agreeing point by point with the proposals of 28 August 1565 [47], though he was anxious to add extra guarantees about damage from raids because he had been caught out before, MacGregor, thesis, 354; 396.

Grey Colin warned the 5th earl to be very careful of hazard ing all the hopes of the rebel Lords on one expedition in the Chase-about Raid.

In the event of an invasion of his territory by the earl of Atholl and the Queen’s forces, Grey Colin wanted to be able to call upon Argyll’s light cavalry and MacGregors’ men, see Introduction.
