Dr Anna Pilz is an Academic Developer at the Institute for Academic Development, University of Edinburgh. She designs and delivers cross-Faculty training to support postgraduate researchers and research staff in their professional development. On the basis of her unsuccessful and successful grant and fellowship applications, she has developed 'A Comprehensive Guide to Fellowship Applications'. Among her pilot projects are 1:1 consultations on 'How to Build your Research Profile' (P&M booking here). She is passionate about best-practice sharing and with an emphasis on researchers' daily realities, she's keen to develop initiatives that enhance community building. As a first-generation academic who has been on fixed-term contracts since completing her PhD in 2013, she's interested in the impact of precarity on researchers' lives, institutional values, and career narratives.
